Chicago, Nov. 18.—Cornell was defeated to-day by the University of Chicago on Marshall Field by a score of 6 to 0. The victory of Chicago was largely due to the aggressive playing of Kennedy, a substitute right halfback, and the kicking of Scrubby, who scored two field goals. Cornell came near tallying one, placing the ball on Chicago's one-yard line, but the Maroons held and kicked to safety.

Cornell had several chances to score during the early part of the game, but luck and vicious playing by the Chicagoans prevented. A strong wind swept across the field and this worked against the Eastern men at critical times.

Under a clear sky the teams struggled almost evenly at times, but the superior punting of Chicago turned the game against Cornell. The crowd spent much of its time cheering in chorus the kicking of Coach Stager's main, who has been one of Coach Stager's main supports this season. Chicago's team work was a surprise, as the eleven only recently met defeat by a large score at the hands of the University of Minnesota.

Several fumbles marked the contest, and numerous penalties were inflicted by the officials, especially on the Connecticut team. In the first and fourth periods Wesleyan was markedly superior to the local eleven. Keeping its nose in the air all of the time, Wesleyan during the second period, however, New York came back strong and held the advantage until the end of the third period.

In the second quarter, by forward passes and end runs, New York advanced the oval as far as the 6-yard line, but here a forward pass was intercepted, and Bacon pointed out of danger. In the third quarter by the same means the home eleven only went as far as the 6-yard mark, only to lose the ball on downs. Wesleyan's touchdown was the result of a forward pass, sent to McCarthy from the 10-yard line on the third down, after an end run and a line plunge had failed to gain any ground. New York made its two points on a safety by Bacon, after a kick by Brennan from

The game to-day was the fifth in twelve years between Cornell and Chicago, and, counting to-day's victory, the Chicagoans have won two of the contests to Cornell's one, the other two being tie games.

Marshall Field was heavy, which was an advantage for Chicago, as the local team outweighed Cornell by 100 pounds to the man. Coach Sweeney of Chicago predicted defeat for his team just before the game, but his assistants were more optimistic.

The middle of the field.

The visitors had by far the best forward pass formations seen at Ohio Field this year, and they managed to work five of them, gaining at least eighty yards. New York, on the other hand, although it, too, worked the same number of forwards, gained only fifty yards by them. This, however, is much better than the team has done since the Yale game.

Kennedy, a substitute back for Chicago. Was Cornell's undoing. With the ball on Cornell's 40-yard line in the second period Kennedy scudded through a broken field for twenty yards, and then Scruby dropped back for a kick from placement, which made a score of 8 points for the Chicago team.

The first half was replete with thrills. The Maroon eleven played with a rush which surprised even the most sanguine of its enthusiasts. The line was impregnable and moved off with a dash in every play. Cornell's attack was weak and poorly planned.

In the third period Kennedy again displayed his prowess as a fighter by carrying the ball in successive plays almost the length of the field. Delayed passes threw

Long runs and sensational plays marked the entire contest and several times the backs from both teams were able to break through the line, throwing off tackle and tackling for good gains. Bacon and Francis, of Wesleyan, proved to be better in this than any of the New York backs, although all four of them, Moore, Elliott, Brennan and Nixon, had a chance to prove their ability in this line. The most sensational of these runs was made by Francis in the first period for twenty-five yards to the 10-yard mark, where it took three men to down him. This gave the eleven the chance to work the forward pass that took the pickin' over the line. Huntley, who was sent in at left end in Zimmels's place, made the best play for the local eleven, recovering a forward pass and running for twenty-five yards to the 20-yard mark as the beginning of the third period.

The Cornell team in consternation, and Chicago's backfield smashed through behind clever interference for gain after gain. After a spectacular forty-yard run from the centre of the field by Kennedy Chicago fought for a touchdown. Sauer went around right end for a gain of twelve yards, and Paine battered his way through the centre for a yard to Cornell's 13-yard line. Scruby, however, was forced to kick from placement, and made the last tally of the game.

In the fourth quarter Cornell fought hard and a series of end runs and attempted forward passes, which lacked distance, succeeded in getting the ball to Chicago's 1-yard line. Here the maroons stood their ground and got the ball on the mark. Scruby kicked from behind the line, and there ensued a monotonous series of line plunges.

Bacon and Francis starred for the victors, gaining practically all of their ground by end runs and line plunges. On the local team there was no one player who could be said to have played the best for his side. All of the backs played as they never have before, and every one of them at some stage of the game got away for long gains. The fact that the New York line held a wall against line plunges in crucial moments was due for the most part to Torrence, Hanneberger and Makay, the centre and guards, and on defence it was they who made the holes that enabled the backs to get through.

As usual the local team showed up poorly in the matter of forming interference for the player with the ball, and the Connecticut eleven, on the contrary, protected its

In the last ten minutes of play Ashbaugh was sent in. After working the pass three times for good gains, Sprackling, on Vermont's 26-yard line, let the ball go, and Ashbaugh made a neat catch for a 15-yard advance. It took him but a second to dart over the line for a touchdown, and his kicking of the goal was perfect. Vermont was dangerous only once, when Sefton's 55-yard sprint took the ball to Brown's 35-yard line, where a goal was tried from placement, but failed.

RACING NEWS AND NOTES

Eddie Dugan to Ride in Austria Under Rothschild Colors.

Jockey Eddie Dugan has been ordered to ride for the Rothschild family in Austria.

Then Banring, in his eagerness to retain the inside position, tripped over the point of his racing skates and went down, with Spolezberg falling on top of him. J. Blum, who seemed to have a safe lead until the scratch man ranged alongside of him, left at once for Austria, where he will ride for Baron Rothschild. The contract calls for him to ride at 166 pounds, a weight he can easily make.

George Archibald, the American rider in the employ of Baron Oppenheim, in Ger-of De Witt Clinton High School, passed the fallen leaders. But Spiegelberg was on his feet in a jiffy, and, tearing by Blum, managed to win by a few inches.

Albert Gershall, of Public School 166, won the honors in the midget race.

Many, will ride in Calcutta, India, during the winter months.
